There are several factors you need to consider when looking for a company to remove your domestic or commercial rubbish. Keep in mind these factors: cost, flexibility, professionalism, friendliness, and add-on services. Let's discuss these five factors closer.

Cost - is the base factor when calculating the best value rubbish removal service to use. Some services have add-on costs that people forget to consider which can include, staff wages, vehicles, fuel, licenses and permits, dump fees, advertising, and misc surcharges.

Flexibility. You are the client and a junk removal company should put your needs first, which means, doing their best to accommodate your schedule, and your unique needs.

Professional Service – Prompt, follow-up phone calls, greeting you by name and with a warm friendly smile, and listening to feedback from customers.

Friendliness – As an independent company with limited advertising funds to compete against the big companies, we've found this to be a powerful competitive differentiator. Our customers appreciate our personalized service and commitment to the local community.

Add-on services. The rubbish removal process has four distinct phases - set-up, monitoring, removal and clean-up. Look for a firm that can integrate all of these phases into their service offering.
